I had to look at the MOA recently for Red Dog stuff and according to MOA 3.03 2.b), EPA will:

"Retain full jurisdiction for permits for which an appeal has been filed at the time of program authorization until that matter is resolved. Upon resolution of the administrative or judicial challenge and in accordance with the transfer schedule in Appendix B, EPA will notify the DEPARTMENT and the permittee that jurisdiction over the permit has been transferred to the DEPARTMENT."

So it got me wondering about Cook Inlet and what I should say about who is doing what now. I basically decided to not say anything in correspondence and answer the question only if it comes up.

It is my understanding that DEC has jurisdiction over the exploration facilities in state waters. The entire permit is not under appeal, just the reproposal of six effluent limits for produced water discharges.
